Kennedy and Nikita Khrushchev during the Cuban Missile Crisis. Each political cartoon has an analysis worksheets based partially on the analysis worksheets created by the National Archives and a set of questions for student inquiry. This package is sufficient as a stand-alone assignment or in conjunction with an assignment such as my video questions for CNN The Sixties, Episode Two, The World on the BEvents of the Cold War Graphic Organizer by This one page graphic organizer includes some major events of the Cold War. It is not meant as a comprehensive assignment. Events included in the graphic organizer are: Bay of Pigs Invasion, Cuban Missile Crisis, Joseph McCarthy and the Red Scare, President Kennedy is Assassinated, Vietnam War. The graphic organizer asks students to describe each event and then find/create a visual that represents each event. This graphic organizer could be used to review or introduce the unit. An answer key is also inc.
In this article, we will be analyzing these political cartoons to understand the different visual interpretations of the Cuban Missile Crisis. By examining these visual texts and recognising their contexts, you will be more familiar with the interpretations to answer the source based case study questions effectively. We will be focusing on the second part: A World Divided by the Cold War – Cuban Missile Crisis. By Estonian and American cartoonist Edmund S. Valtman [31 August 1961] The cartoon portrays Castro as a towering figure over two petite looking persons representing Cuba and Brazil. Castro persuades Brazil to lead a communist revolution like his. Yet, Brazil looks bewildered as Cuba is in a poor state. In late August 1961, Cuba was facing food shortages, whereas Brazil was in debt. The cartoon was possibly meant to depict Brazil's skepticism towards Castro's revolution. By British Magazine, Punch [1962] The cartoon depicts both superpower leaders (Kennedy and Khrushchev) feeling annoyed over their neighbour's tree branch(es) extended into their own territory. The intended audiences are possibly the citizens of USA and USSR in depicting superpower involvement, seen in terms of their bases in other countries (e.g. Cuba and Turkey). By German cartoonist Herbert Kolthaus [30 September 1962] Below the cartoon, the caption reads 'What do you mean, a threat? Surely it's all right to go fishing, isn't it?' The cartoonist depicts an ironic illustration of Moscow's true motives on Cuba. In Sept 1962, an agreement was signed between Cuba and USSR for the construction of a port in the Bay of Havana, which Castro claimed to be a base for the Soviet fishing fleet in the Atlantic. By Die Vaterland [1961] The cartoon depicts a miniature-sized Castro targeting the Soviet missile at a terrified 'Uncle Sam' (USA), while Khrushchev looks on from afar in delight. By Welsh political cartoonist Leslie G. Illingworth – published in British newspaper, The Daily Mail [29 October 1962] The cartoon illustrates both Kennedy and Khrushchev taking part in an arm wrestling match that neither side was likely to win. They are seated on missiles that could go off anytime. The cartoonist is trying to depict the unpredictability of the world as the crisis may lead to 'mutually assured destruction'. By Hungarian-British cartoonist Victor Weisz ('Vicky') – published in London News [24 October 1962] The cartoon illustrates Kennedy in The White House and Khrushchev in the Kremlin facing each other with nuclear missiles placed outside their buildings. In context, the cartoon depicts Kennedy as being hypocritical as he questioned Khrushchev about the missiles in Cuba, since there were twice as many American missiles as there are than the Russians. By Estonian and American cartoonist Edmund S. Valtman [30 October 1962] The cartoon depicts Khrushchev as a dentist extracting Castro's teeth, which is illustrated as missiles. During the Cuban Missile Crisis, Kennedy announced that US would impose a 'naval quarantine' to prevent the delivery of Soviet missiles to Cuba. Khrushchev eventually backed down and agreed to remove the missiles. How do I use these sources to ace the Source Based Case Study questions? First, be familiar with the main perspectives of Cuba, USA and USSR in explaining their involvement in the Cuban Missile Crisis. Refer to the aforementioned article for more information. Second, examine these cartoons and attempt to answer the following question: How far do these sources support the view that the Cuban Missile Crisis was a superpower conflict? Third, pay attention to the date of publication and the source origin (i.e. who published it?) to consider the motive. This section will be important when you attempt to derive the provenance of each source.
